There are many options for getting around to Puerto Rico. Numerous flights connect various airports throughout the island, including Culebra and Vieques. There is a ferry service from San Juan to various nearby destinations, and from Fajardo to Vieques and Culebra. Throw in the train, bus, taxi and p'blicos, and you won't have any trouble getting to your destination or just go out and explore what Puerto Rico has to offer. From the airport, look for Tur'astico taxis that carry the signature garita (sentry Box) badge as a logo. You can also find them in designated taxi parking lots at various locations in San Juan (including Armas Square and a few steps from Colon Square). Taxis can be expensive, with fares from the airport to Condado, Old San Juan, and Isla Verde starting at $15. P'blico is a private shuttle that transports people all over the island. This is a great option if you have time on your hands (a cross-island trip can easily run a few hours with a few stops), want to see small, local towns along the way, and enjoy a mute with blue-collar locals. Puerto Rico's public buses are called guaguas. Tourists in San Juan are most interested in two lines: the A5, which travels from Old San Juan to Isla Verde, and the B21, which runs between Old San Juan, Condado, and Plaza Las Americas Mall in Hato Rey. The Department of Transportation also manages the efficient Metrobus, which has the most extensive network in the city. There's an interactive map on their website that will help you plan your way around San Juan. Puerto Rico also has a green initiative underway to make their buses more environmentally friendly... Always a plus. Predictably, virtually every car rental company has a presence in Puerto Rico, along with several local companies. Partial list includes: AvisBudgetCharlie Car Rental (the largest local agency on the island)HertzNational Car RentalThrifty In Vieques: In Culebra: Train travel between cities does not exist, but you can bypass the metropolitan San Juan via Tren Urbano (City Train), which is primarily a commuter train connecting residential and commercial points in the capital. Thus, Tren Urbano does not reach Old San Juan. Puerto Rico has a decent and very cheap ferry service. From Old San Juan you can take the ferry to Catagno (this is the cheapest way to get to the Bacardi distillery) or to Hato Rey (the banking district and place of Plaza Las Americas. , and the service can be spotty. You can also take a car by ferry, but ferry service for cars is much more rare and less reliable. The fastest and most efficient way on the island or on Vieques and Kulebra - it's a small plane. Several charter flights and local airlines operate from San San Luis Munoz Marin International Airport in Isla Verde or its small local isla Grande airport in Miramar. Among the airlines you can find here: Air FlamencoVieques Air LinkCape Air Thanks for let us know! According to official estimates, there are more than 240 beaches on the tropical islands of Puerto Rico. But the locals will tell you there are many more and some of them are some of the most charming in the entire Caribbean. From long sandy strips of sheer natural beauty to a high-altitude fringe on the ocean that beckons cruise ships, you'll find a beach to your liking in Puerto Rico. And you don't even need a passport to get to them. Here are the 10 best beaches in Puerto Rico, regardless of your taste. The best beaches of Puerto Rico Playa Flamenco, on the eastern island of Culebra, are long and its waters are clear. It also houses the most striking collection of found art in all of Puerto Rico: graffiti-decorated 50s-era army tanks rusting on the edge of the surf, a throwback to the days when Coulebra was a fleet of bombing range. Playa Condado. Waikiki San Juan Beach, is an iconic high-rise fringe urban playscape that largely defines the cruise brochure image of San Juan. Rincon, on the southwest coast, is famous for its surfing, especially in winter. Near the entrance to the El Janke National Forest, Lucillo is also known for a number of several dozen food stalls with all kinds of amazing fried treats, or frituras, from seafood to plains. Tamarindo Beach on Culebra is a little less visited, and is known for excellent snorkeling and sea turtles. Carlos Rosario on Culebra is an underdeveloped but increasingly popular beach with a reputation for incredible snorkeling. La Chiba, also known as Blue Beach, is a highly recommended beach on Vieques. A former Navy bombing range that is now re-emerging with a serious tourist credo, Vieques has an laid-back vibe. Many of its beaches are still known in color, from the era when navy jet pilots needed an easy way to keep them straight. Playa Sucia in Cape Rojo (southern Puerto Rico) translates as a dirty beach, but this stunning stretch of sand is increasingly proclaimed a little-known gem. Boqueron Beach in Cabo Rojo is a non-tourist, family gem. Guanica, a city in the southwest, offers a wide range of relatively quiet Caribbean beaches washed up by the Caribbean Sea. In fact, you have a selection of free activities in Puerto Rico to enjoy. Here are the best ways to spend absolutely nothing and blast doing it. 01 out of 06 It is for art lovers in particular. If you're lucky (or wise enough) to be in Old San Juan on the first Tuesday of every month in peak season (February to May and September to December), go out to town for a night of art appreciation and free wine. About 20 galleries (and they are some of the best on the island) keep their doors open late on these nights, inviting everyone to take a look at their collections. The atmosphere is a mixture of an open-air museum and a cocktail party. Travelling minstrels sometimes take to the streets to add a touch of whimsical charm to the evening. 02 of the 06 Daderot/Wikimedia Commons/Public Domain Every city in Puerto Rico has a patron, and every saint is revered once a year at the Patronal Festival, or Patron Saint Festival. Reduce the number of cities on the island and you talk about the festival every week. Throw in the fact that the party usually happens within a few days and you will realize that they are a terrific way to catch music, culture, dancing and local taste. They are also absolutely free (except for the food, naturally, which I highly recommend). Now, getting to which city is hosting your festival is another matter, but p'blico should do the trick without picking up your wallet. Speaking of festivals, the biggest one is all happening in Ponce: Ponce Carnival is an annual can't miss the toña party. 03 of 06 Serge Melky / Wikimedia Commons / CC BY 2.0 Bacardi Plant in Catagno (the world's largest rum factory), located just a stone's throw from Old San Juan, is open to visitors all year round. The trolleybus tour takes a look at the history of rum making on the island and the origin of Bacardi. You can also test your olfactory prowess, and of course you get a free drink. Tours fill up early, so call ahead before you go. By the way, if you use a tour company to visit Casa Bacardi, you will pay about $30, but the good people at Bacardi don't charge for their tours. The trick is to take the ferry from the pier in Old San Juan (at a small price) and then grab a taxi to the factory (which will set you back a few dollars). 04 of 06 Michael DeFreitas/Getty Images You can't argue with the beauty, popularity and price of taking Puerto Rico's beaches. One of the island's most enticing assets is the island's beaches (more miles of them!) are a major draw for millions of tourists. Please note, however, that not all beaches are free. In B beaches, called Balnearios, you have to pay for parking, but in turn you get amenities like lifeguards, picnics and toilets. The vast majority of the island's beaches, however, are pristine, idyllic places where the warm waters of the Caribbean meets the sun-kissed Puerto Rican sand. Continue to 5 of 6 below. 05 of 06 Danita Delimont / Getty Images You don't have to pay to enjoy El Yunque. It won't cost you a dime to hike your boots off in the only rainforest system in the U.S. National Forest System, strip down to a swimsuit and dive into a plunging waterfall, or check out the forests of the El Portal Visitor Center. However, you have to get here in order to do all these things and that's where the bill comes in. 06 of 06 The Ventana al Jazz, or Window to Jazz, is a wonderful free event organized by Heineken, which is fast becoming the patron saint of jazz in Puerto Rico. Heineken Jazz Fest is Puerto Rico's annual jazz festival and it attracts some of the best names in the business. Ventana Al-Jazz is a byproduct of this event held on the last Sunday of each month at Ventana el Mar Park in Condado. This evening is live jazz music accompanied by a natural orchestra of gentle waves crashing on the beach of Condado. Beach.
